THURSDAY

NEW The Press & Politics

Oct. 24–Dec. 19 • 11:00am-12:15pm

No class November 28

$45 member; $60 general, 8 sessions

The media has always been the source of information for the community, but technology has historically altered the relationship between public opinion, politics and the special role that media provides. The contemporary press faces new crises caused by the rise of twitter, internet and Facebook. The reexamination of historical relationships between public opinion and social and communal norms can perhaps enable us to understand present day apprehensions.

Dr. Natalie Isser, Professor Emerita, Penn State

NEW Religions & Opera

Oct. 24–Dec. 5 • 1:00-2:30pm

No class November 28

$45 member; $60 general, 6 sessions

The sacred and profane are often strange bedfellows. We will view, analyze and discuss three well know examples of an opera depicting the effect of Jewish traditions; an opera concerning a Protestant Minister; and an opera steeped in Catholic dogma.

Gerald A. Tremblay, M.A. Educator, Psychologist
